The artists/collectives involved in the project A World Where Many Worlds Fit demonstrate a strong commitment to social change and do not position themselves as neutral in relation to globalization. Many of the included works focus on the cities that have now become known for past demonstrations, counter-summits and/or blockades and are presented as shorthand descriptions for these events: Seattle, Prague, Salzburg, Genoa, Buenos Aires, Gleneagles, St. Petersburg or Heiligendamm. Through video, drawing mural, installation, sculpture and photography, the exhibition can be thought of as a course that traces the importance of the "movement of movements" and presents a critical anti-capitalist strategy to fight climate change, to question the property relations that structure class struggle, and to create an effective discussion concerning collective social struggle.

On January 29, 2010, 7:00 to 9:30 PM a round table on anti-globalization opened to the general public will be held at the Tremplin (97 Wellington South, Sherbrooke) featuring Austrian artist and guest curator Oliver Ressler, German artist Petra Gerschner, German activist Michael Backmund, members of the artist group ATSA and sociologist Cheryl Gosselin (Bishop's University).
